WowWee If you go to a random parent toddler and ask what song is stuck in their head, chances are it's pinkfong Baby Shark. The video has gone viral, garnering more than 146 million views on YouTube. (About a million of them come from my 3-year-old son, who insists we watch it every time I cut his nails.) This content is imported from YouTube. You may be able to find the same content in other formats, or you may be able to find more information, on their website. This song is the perfect earworm, with a repetitive chorus and singing designed to be played over and over again in your brain forever until you start thinking, hey, is this really my favorite song? It became the subject of memes and parodies and tweets. An editor here recently mentioned the Sharkholm Syndrome phenomenon. If you know the tot in the upheavals of Sharkmania, what better gift to give than a doll who plays a Baby Shark song without having to pick up a device and navigate to YouTube? The one that will make the song available to hear it, which is always, just by pressing a simple button? Well, you're in luck, because last year, WowWee launched two types of official Baby Shark toys: a cuddly doll ($17) and a soft, stackable sound cube ($8). Squeeze one of them, and the song will play. Each comes in three varieties: Baby Shark, Mommy Shark, and Daddy Shark. And if one of them finds his way into my house, then I will show them the way back to the sea. This is the ultimate Noisy Toy, as the effect doesn't stop when the doll is removed for the day - you'll find yourself thinking about the neon-coloured Shark Family for the rest of the night. Last year, there seemed to be a lot of people in this world who wanted revenge on their friends with the kids, because this toy sold out on Amazon on its first weekend. This year, WowWee is all stuffed and has lots of new Baby Shark toys to get your hands on – you know, just in case there are parents on your list who are doing something to you off. Are they tired? Do they have wet diapers? Then again, sometimes, newborns are fussy for no reason, which is why Melissa Gersin set out to create a simple solution to this common crying problem. This content is imported from Facebook. You may be able to find the same content in other formats, or you may be able to find more information, on their website. While working as a maternity nurse in 2011, Melissa found herself caring for three babies while using the S 5 position (swaddle, side or stomach, shush, swing, and suck) from Dr. Harvey Karp's popular book, The Happiest Baby on the Block, according to Forbes. It was Dr. Karp's fourth trimester theory that inspired Melissa to create Tranquilo Mat in 2016. The product is essentially a vibrating mat that parents can use on the go to soothe their newborns, with similar sounds and movements they had felt before birth. All current calming methods such as swings and vibrating chairs are complemented by funny melodies. They don't work like the strong white noise that babies crave in the womb, Melissa told Forbes. The chairs and swings are also big and big... Plus, they always require parents to cut off contact with their baby. This content is imported from Facebook. You may be able to find the same content in other formats, or you may be able to find more information, on their website. Melissa appeared on ABC reality show Shark Tank with her invention on February 10, after which Tranquilo Mat sold more than 3,500 units totaling $300,000 in sales less than a week later. In the show, the Boston-based nurse explained that the cable-free portable mat features several vibrating modes, including high, medium, and heartbeat, which can instantly soothe the baby. Patented mats come in two sizes: small at $84.99 and large at $99.99. Small ones are best used in baby carriers, strollers and car seats. Large mats can be placed on cots and playpens. Both mats are designed to be easily rolled up and fit inside a bag or diaper bag. This content is imported from Facebook. You may be able to find the same content in other formats, or you may be able to find more information, on their website. How does it work? The Tranquilo Mat website explains that for nine months, the baby feels every shift in his mother's body movements and is surrounded by stable sounds, such as your heart rate and blood flow, which can be as high as 80-90 decibels (almost as hard as a hairdryer!). In his research, Dr. Karp found that parents can cure fussy babies when mimicking these same sounds, such as shushing loudly and bouncing the baby up and down. That's why she often refers to the first four months of a baby's life as the fourth trimester as they transition from the womb to the real world. Still not sure this product is magical? Global Biodiversity, Biology and Conservation: Did you know that you can track some shark movements on Twitter? Or that scales on their skin have affected the way humans design boats, planes, and even swimwear? Or sharks have more senses than humans? In this biology course, you will learn how scientists study sharks. You'll join researchers at locations in laboratories, aquariums and oceans around the world to learn about the biodiversity, biology and conservation of sharks, rays and chimaera. In this activity-rich course, you'll track the movements of wild sharks, observe shark habitats and behaviors, and dig up fossil records. You will also examine topics in the functional anatomy, sensory biology, reproduction, behavior, and ecology of many of the 1,200 living species. It's an exciting time to be a shark biologist! The explosion of new research methods and technologies leads to a world of surprising discoveries. We will introduce new, as well as traditional, techniques to classify sharks, understand behavior, and unravel the mysteries of shark evolution. We will explore global shark populations to consider shark-human interactions and their impact on history and culture. You will be rewarded by your ability to see almost any animal with new eyes. Practice thinking like a biologist while honing critical skills that could lead to broader observations about the ongoing history of life on Earth. Habitat and distribution of sharks from around the world. Evolutionary history and shark and allied relationships. Functional anatomy swims, breathes, and eats.
